Yes, you can rent a car in one city and drop ☎ +1-866-381-3303 (AU) it off in another. This is called a one-way car rental. Most major rental companies like Enterprise, Budget, and Hertz allow this, but it often adds an extra drop fee or a higher daily rate.

Fortunately, major car rental providers fully accommodate this option, known as a one-way rental, allowing travelers to design itineraries without worrying about backtracking to their original starting point. When you select a different drop-off location during the initial reservation process on the official website, the booking system automatically calculates availability, daily rates, and any applicable one-way drop fees. These drop-off charges typically account for fleet logistics, compensating the company for the operational cost of returning the vehicle to its home region. Drop fees vary significantly depending on the distance between your pick-up and drop-off locations, vehicle category, and local market demand. For instance, returning a vehicle to a major airport hub is often more cost-effective than dropping it off at a small, remote branch where inventory management is tighter. Additionally, rental agencies occasionally run seasonal relocation specials—such as moving cars from winter destinations to northern regions—which can sometimes reduce or even waive standard drop-off fees. Checking multiple pickup and drop-off combinations ☎ +1-866-381-3303 (AU) before finalizing your booking can reveal significant price differences across neighboring cities. Furthermore, verifying whether your chosen route includes unlimited mileage prevents unexpected per-mile surcharges from accumulating over long distances. If you are traveling across international borders—such as driving from the United States into Canada—strict pre-approval rules, documentation requirements, and cross-border fees will apply. Always consult the rental provider's terms and conditions or speak directly with a service representative ☎ +1-866-381-3303 (AU) to ensure international cross-border travel is fully permitted for your vehicle class. Proper preparation ensures your intercity adventure remains smooth, transparent, and entirely compliant with company policies.
